Sultry Criticism From

Republican Source.

From Oklahoma City Post, Rep.

If Mr. Frank Greer would turn his attention toward harmonizing the factions of the party rather than disorganizing them with such breaks as the introduction of the "minority report" at the Tulsa convention and the statement at Bartlesville that Indian and negroes should be in the same class, some of us might be made to believe that his Republicanism is sincere.

HIS SISTER IN A CIRCUS.

Publisher Stewart, Makes Discovery In His Own Town.

In 1888 a sister of R. L. Stewart, editor of the Jennings (Okla.) News, joined a circus at her home town in Kansas and disappeared. A circus went to Jennings the other day and Stewart took his family to see the performance. He believed that he saw a family resemblance in one of the woman performers and upon inquiry found that she was his sister. She was the wife of Frank Carpenter, one of the owners of the circus. The Stewart family moved to Oklahoma at the opening of old Oklahoma and settled on a claim near Crescent in Logan county. The daughter returned to the old Kansas home in search of her mother, but as the neighbors could tell her that her people had moved to Oklahoma. During her nine years of circus life Mrs. Carpenter spent ten in foreign countries, of which six were in South America and four in Central America and Old Mexico. During her travels through the new state, writes her brother in his newspaper, "she had looked in vain for her people, but failed to find them until reaching Jennings and the circus had pitched its tent at our door and had showed me right to us before the last was found."

MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY.

Foreigner Who Can Not Make His Wants Known.

On the back of the head sat a soft oat. His pants came to his shoe tops and in his long bony hand he carried a satchel. On the street corner he stood showing his railroad ticket to the police. He could neither speak nor understand English and wanted to go to his destination. The telegraph read that he had started from Kansas City to a small town in California. He came in on the M. K. & T. and wanted to know the next move. He was taken by the policeman to a German, a Frenchman, an Italian and a Greek. Neither could understand his language. His name was written on the ticket but could not be read. Apparently disguised because no one could be found who spoke his language he stayed for the "Katy" depot and that was the last seen of him. The officer tried to persuade him to remain at the depot until the night train arrived, but he was restless and wandered away.
